THE ORIGIN STORY OF THE MENACE BEANS

Every great brand has a creation myth, and The Menace Beans is no exception. According to interviews and social media posts, the idea was born during a late-night cooking session. Dennis wanted to create a bean dish that was hearty, spicy, and packed with flavor—something that would stand out from the usual side dish. He experimented with smoked paprika, chipotle peppers, garlic, and a secret blend of herbs. The result was a bean stew that had a little heat, a lot of depth, and a certain “menacing” quality that made it addictive.

The name came naturally. As Dennis described it, “These beans are a menace to your taste buds—in a good way.” He posted the recipe online, and the response was overwhelming. People tried it, shared it, and began creating their own variations. The hashtag #MenaceBeans started trending in small circles, and soon Christopher Lloyd Dennis The Menace Beans became a searchable phenomenon. The origin story is a testament to how a simple idea, executed with passion and shared generously, can snowball into a community-driven movement.

Key Ingredients and the Menace Factor

What exactly makes The Menace Beans so special? While Dennis has kept some details proprietary, he has shared foundational elements. The dish typically starts with pinto or black beans as a base, simmered low and slow. Then comes the “menace”:

- Smoky heat: Chipotle peppers in adobo sauce provide a deep, smoky warmth that lingers.
- Umami explosion: A dash of soy sauce or liquid smoke adds complexity.
- Garlic & onion: Sautéed until golden, forming a savory foundation.
- Secret spices: A blend that includes cumin, coriander, and a touch of cinnamon for warmth.
- Acid balance: A squeeze of lime juice brightens the richness.

The result is a bean dish that defies expectations. It’s not just a side—it’s a main event. The name “menace” fits because these beans are bold enough to stand up to strong meats, yet satisfying on their own. Dennis often recommends serving them over rice, with cornbread, or as a filling for tacos.

Ingredients

- 2 cups dried pinto beans (or 4 cans, drained and rinsed)
- 1 large onion, diced
- 4 cloves garlic, minced
- 2 chipotle peppers in adobo, minced
- 1 teaspoon smoked paprika
- 1 teaspoon ground cumin
- ½ teaspoon ground coriander
- Pinch of cinnamon (optional, but recommended)
- 2 tablespoons soy sauce or tamari
- Juice of 1 lime
- Salt and pepper to taste
- Olive oil
- Fresh cilantro for garnish

Instructions

1. If using dried beans, soak them overnight in cold water. Drain and rinse. In a large pot, cover beans with fresh water and simmer for 1-2 hours until tender. Drain, reserving some cooking liquid. (If using canned beans, skip this step.)
2. In a large skillet, heat olive oil over medium heat. Sauté onion until translucent (about 5 minutes). Add garlic and cook for another minute.
3. Stir in the chipotle peppers, smoked paprika, cumin, coriander, and cinnamon. Cook until fragrant (about 30 seconds).
4. Add the cooked (or canned) beans to the skillet. Pour in about ½ cup of reserved bean liquid (or water). Stir in the soy sauce.
5. Simmer for 10-15 minutes, mashing some beans slightly with a spoon to thicken the mixture. Adjust consistency with more liquid if needed.
6. Remove from heat, stir in lime juice, and season with salt and pepper.
7. Garnish with fresh cilantro and serve with rice, tortillas, or crusty bread.
